We can easily see that Real Madrid and FC Barcelona are usually fighting for the first place, being the latter the clear winner in most of the recent years. Atlético Madrid has also found its place between these two giants in recent years, being able to win in the 2013-14 season.

Other big and well-known teams such as Sevilla and Athletic Bilbao are not able to keep up with the three main players mentioned before.

There's a slow but steady decrease in the goals difference (goals scored - goals conceded) for the three main players from the 2014-15 season. This means, either it's every time harder for these teams to score goals, or their rivals are scoring more when playing against them.

The wins rate has been decreasing over the last years for Real Madrid and FC Barcelona, almost as the goals difference. There's clearly a relationship between both: the amount of goals and the win rate.
